A United Nations official, Vincent Cochetel, has called on the Security Council to pressure Israel into respecting international law. The Security Council has discussed the matter several times over the past month and has so far not succeeded in passing a resolution, with President Trump repeatedly vetoing any resolution that was adopted. Cochetel's statement comes in the wake of a "message of support" from the American Jewish Committee, the Anti-Defamation League and the American Jewish Committee's Military Committee, along with a resolution introduced in the United States Congress last week. According to the report, Cochetel said: "We have been preparing a resolution against the violence perpetrated by Israel against Palestinians in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and the occupied Syrian Golan since January 30. We have been working on this resolution for a long time. "We think that violence by Israel against Palestinians will not go unanswered. We are of the opinion that it is time that a resolution is passed in this context," he stated. Cochetel called upon the Security Council to act, saying: “We are encouraged by the resolution adopted by the Commission on Human Rights. We call upon the Security Council to act on this resolution and we are convinced that the international community, the European Union, and the United States will not let Israel get away with committing war crimes.” Cochetel said that the Jewish State must respect international law and international humanitarian law, especially in regards to humanitarian protection, access to hospitals and schools, and the status of political parties and the United Nations. “We also want to bring to the Security Council’s attention that Israel should not continue the use of collective punishment in the occupied Palestinian territory,” he said.
